POWER in QUESTION!

REGENTS APPROVE PRESIDENTIAL SELECTION COMMITTEE PLAN

NEBRASKA STATE HISTORICAL SOCIETY

SECOND PAGE

Search committee called 'top heavy'

By JOHN WATSON

Lincoln—It was a stormy Friday at Varner Hall.

While thunderstorms raged outside, the University of Nebraska Board of Regents, after a torrent of debate, agreed upon a plan which will have a major effect on the university's future.

The board adopted a plan to select members of the presidential search committee, which will nominate candidates for the position of NU president.

The Board of Regents removed former President Ronald Roskens from office July 31. Currently, UNL Chancellor Martin Massengale is serving as interim president.

The search committee plan was submitted by Regent Don Blank at the board's Sept. 8 meeting. Blank, chairman of the Internal Governance Subcommittee, said board Chairwoman Nancy Hoch had asked him to put together a proposed structure for the search committee.

The search committee will review the applicants and submit four to eight nominees to the board.

During the meeting students, faculty and administrators voiced concerns regarding the committee's structure.

Blank's plan limits student representation on the committee to one student. One faculty member from each university will sit on the committee, but there will be no voting administrative representative. Six representatives of the general public will also fill committee seats.

According to UNO Student President/Regent Paula Effle, Blank had said earlier two seats would most likely be reserved for student representatives.

However, in the final resolution presented Friday, Blank's plan left room for only one student delegate.

During debate, Effle asked Blank why she was "left out of the regents' communication that lowered the number of student representatives from two to one."

Blank replied, "No one received that

Committee will have one student member

The University of Nebraska Board of Regents approved a plan Friday for selecting members of a presidential search committee.

The committee will be responsible for nominating a replacement for former NU President Ronald Roskens. The board removed Roskens from office July 31.

The search committee will consist of 12 voting members. One-half of those members will be selected from the general public and one-half will be selected from the students, faculty and alumni of the University of Nebraska.

According to the plan, the committee will include:

- Six members from the general public representing the state geographically. Each of the eight regents will submit two nominees, six will be selected by the board from those 16 nominees.

- Three faculty members, one from each campus, selected by the board from a list of contenders comprised by the three university Faculty Senates.

- One student selected from a pool of six.

Each Student Government at the three universities will nominate two. The board will select one.

- One NU Foundation representative selected by the board from two nominees.

- One "wild card" member who will be selected by the board from the faculty or staff at the university.

Twelve ex-officio, non-voting members will also be appointed to serve as advisors to the committee. The ex-officio members will include:

- One affirmative action officer.
- One administrative officer, who the board prefers to be a member of Central Administration.

- Three representatives of the alumni associations from each of the three campuses.

- One board member who will be selected by Board Chairwoman Nancy Hoch.

NU Regent Don Blank, who authored the plan, said the committee should begin the search near the end of December. He said the committee will review the applicants and submit four to eight nominees to the board.

communication."

"I'm really disgusted," Effle said after the meeting. "Two is inadequate, one is impossible."

UNL Student President/Regent Brian Hill also told the regents one student could not accurately represent all three campuses, because "all three campuses are distinctly different." He said UNO has more non-traditional students and the University of Nebraska Medical Center has more professional students.

"(There are about) 40,000 students at the University of Nebraska. I can't think of a more major constituency," Hill said. "I think there is an underlying message that the students are unqualified to be on the committee."

Regent Kermit Hansen said the final selection of the president lies with the board. Since three student members sit on the board, student representation "is adequate if not over-weighted," he said.

Currently, student regents may participate in discussion and debate at board meetings, however their actual vote does not count.

Effle said a total of six to 12 students would be chosen by the three NU student governments. The board would then select one representative for the search committee.

"We need to find the most objective, knowledgeable student," she said.

UNO Chancellor Del Weber told the board he agrees the committee's composition is not balanced. "There is no place on this committee, other than by chance, for any input by the administration," Weber said.

"When you consider that the president of the university works most closely with administrators, I think that's something that really needs to be considered," Weber said.

Medical Center Chancellor Charles Andrews emphasized to the regents he had been involved in many executive searches.

"The most important thing you can do is to make sure the major constituencies are represented," Andrews advised. "This particular make-up does not."

Andrews told the regents they should appoint members whom would assure confidence in the committee's final decision.

Jim Wilson, president of the Medical Center's Faculty Senate, said he was quite concerned with the "top-heavy nature" of the committee. He said the number of members from the general public should be reduced and the number of student or faculty representatives on the committee should be increased.

Medical Center Student President/Regent Jim Anderson told the board the general public has their voice through the regents, who are elected to represent their constituencies.

"The students' and faculties' only voice and only official vote will be in the search committee," Anderson said. "The number of public positions should be reduced."

After discussing the number of committee members chosen from the general public, the board voted down an amendment which would have decreased the number from six to four. All three student regents voted in favor of the amendment.

Student Regent Hill then introduced an amendment to add three students, one from each campus, as ex-officio, non-voting members. That amendment failed, with only the three student regents supporting it.

Jim McShane, president of UNL's Faculty Senate, said public input into decisions which effect the university is "terribly important." However, he said the faculty should have more representation on the committee.

Regent Rosemary Skrupa said during debate she agrees with the faculty concerns. "We're saying, that these people (the faculty) are not general public. We're saying that they're not taxpayers, they're not citizens," she said.

Blank said the committee should begin the search near the end of December. Until then, he said the board must conduct an internal analysis of central administration. That analysis, he said, should give the search committee some basis for desired qualities to look for in the new president.

Legitimacy of Coalition questioned

By DAVE MANNING

The Coalition of NU Faculty remains a mystery.

A letter released by the group Thursday has raised questions regarding the legitimacy and existence of the coalition.

The author or authors of the letter, printed in the Sept. 8 issue of the Gateway, demanded the resignation of University of Nebraska Board of Regents' Chairwoman Nancy Hoch.

UNO Faculty Senate President Kim Sosin said she had no idea who wrote the letter, adding she hadn't heard from any UNO faculty who supported the coalition's views.

"I found it very malicious and vicious," she said. "Since it was anonymous, there's no validity to it."

The letter stated Hoch should resign, which "would enable the university to put its troubled recent past to rest and permit Interim President (Martin) Massengale to get on with his task to bind the institution's wounds and move it forward."

In response to the question of whether she would resign, Hoch said, "That's not a question that merits an answer. This is a job worth doing. I plan to work hard toward the future."

"Anonymous letters don't merit a response," she said.

President of UNO's American Association of University Professors Janet West said she did not know who was involved in the supposed coalition.

"If, in fact, there are faculty on this campus who are part of this coalition, they are unknown to me," she said.

West said she was disturbed by the coalition's anonymity. West compared the regents' decision to not explain their reason for the dismissal of former NU President Ronald Roskens to the coalition's choice to not come forward.

"This is just another form of secretiveness," she said. "It's virtually the same thing."

In the letter, the coalition wrote its reason for remaining anonymous was "due to the vindictive and petty nature displayed by the board under (Hoch's) leadership."

According to West, the faculty are free to express their opinions. "There was no need for an anonymous action."

Both faculty senate presidents at University of Nebraska - Lincoln and the Medical Center said they had found no support for the coalition on their campuses.

"No one called to tell me that they supported what was alleged to be the statement of the coalition," Jim McShane, UNL Faculty Senate president, said.

Jim Wilson, Faculty Senate president at the Medical Center, said he "looked high and low, under the cover of darkness" and found no coalition members on his campus.

The letter, however, referred to "the employees and students of the NU system's four campus facilities."

At UNL, the university is divided between the East and City campuses. Adding those divisions to UNO and the Medical Center would constitute four campuses.

However, West said, "That's not the way it's generally viewed here at UNO."

According to Walter Bacon, vice president of UNO's Faculty Senate, there is competition between the East and City campuses for resources.

"The whole thing is very suspicious," he said.

Bacon said the letter did include some good points, but it lacked political sensitivity.

He said he hoped people wouldn't "jump to conclusions" because some of the phrasing in the letter was similar to comments he had made earlier in the Gateway.

"I didn't write it," Bacon said. "There weren't enough polysyllabic words in it."

Regents move forward

At the University of Nebraska Board of Regents first full meeting of the 1989-90 academic year, Board Chairwoman Nancy Hoch said it's time the regents put recent controversies behind them and move forward.

"We're going to move ahead with the business of the university, which is education," Hoch said.

The board Friday approved the following:

- The purchase of a medical linear accelerator for $880,542. University of Nebraska Medical Center Chancellor Charles Andrews said the equipment will be used in the Medical Center's oncology section of the radiology department.

- A $268,073 grant from the U.S. Commerce Department to purchase television equipment for the production facilities at UNO's KYNE-TV.

- A design for the University Health Care project at the Medical Center. The building will include a warehouse, a five-story outpatient clinic and six new operating rooms.

- An extension of the university's tenure settlement program from 1991 to 1993. According to the new policy, older faculty members will be given the opportunity to retire earlier, opening positions for new professors.

The board also heard the following reports:

- The decentralization of the university's student information systems. The regents approved a proposal in January that returned student records to the three campuses. Eight employees from the Computing Services of central administration to the University of Nebraska—Lincoln.

- A proposal that would create an aviation institute at UNO. According to UNO Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs Otto Bauer the institute would develop and implement instruction designed to prepare graduates for careers in the aviation field. The regents will vote on the proposal at their October meeting.

Courses give students cultural knowledge

By PATRICK RUNGE

Knowledge of other cultures may soon be as important for education majors as reading, writing and arithmetic.

According to Teacher Education Professor Ivalyn Vanevery, UNO's College of Education offers teacher education courses giving students the knowledge to provide multicultural instruction to future pupils.

"We have always used ourselves as the norm, and any culture that varied from us varied from the norm," Vanevery said. "Somehow we used that interpretation as less than rather than equal to."

In each methods course the students learn there are areas that lend themselves to the global concept, Vanevery said.

"Global education is an approach that helps students develop knowledge of other peoples and a greater respect for cultural differences," Vanevery said. "It's probably the greater respect that is most important."

The College of Education is also developing courses specifically for global education.

"We use the existing curriculum materials as a focus for infusing a global perspective at any grade level in any subject area," Vanevery said.

UNO is one of the few universities focusing on global education in this way.

"There are some universities that have done quite a bit in the field of global education, and there are others who have done nothing," she said.

Vanevery said school districts are required to identify multicultural aspects within their curricula.

"The teacher must identify particular lessons that bring out the multicultural theory. The information has always been in the textbooks. We just have not highlighted it, and perhaps that's what we need to do," she said.

The need for a multicultural education includes the increased interdependence of people brought about by improvements in communication, Vanevery said.

"It's just not something we can ignore. It really has an impact on our future," she said.

She said the United States is economically interdependent with other nations and cultures in areas such as transportation, communication and tourism.

Nebraska's economy is also involved in the global market. "Nebraska is one of the top ten agricultural exporting states," Vanevery said.

"We can't afford not to know what's going on (in the global market), and we can't afford not to be concerned about it," she said.

Vanevery said many governors at this year's National Governors Conference expressed the need for more emphasis on global education.

Recommendations included education courses to improve teachers' international awareness and a required international element in all college majors, particularly business programs.

Vanevery said the focus on global education must be made now.

"Think about a stone thrown into a pond," Vanevery said of the effect of global education. "The ripples just keep moving out and those ripples go around the world."

OPINION

It's time to take action

We must stop the Board of Regents. Not just the editorial staff of the Gateway, but the thousands of students, faculty and staff of the University of Nebraska - even the Daily Nebraskan.

The Board of Regents' decision to limit student representation on the presidential search committee to one is, as UNO Student President/Regent Paula Effle said, "impossible."

Likewise, the restriction of only three faculty representatives on the committee and the total exclusion of administrative representation on the committee is difficult to understand.

The composition of the search committee must be changed, or a new committee should be made. It will only take seven members of the committee to make up a majority. For example, the six committee members from the general public plus the one "wild card" member (stacking the deck?) could determine the candidates for the next president of the University of Nebraska.

Staff EDITORIAL

We must stop the Board of Regents.

The regents, in a flash of brilliance reminiscent of their decision to remove NU President Ronald Roskens from office, have decided it's in the university's best interests to have only four people representing roughly 70,000 NU community members.

Basically, the board has decided the University of Nebraska should be a minority in the search for a new University of Nebraska president.

When we are banished to a secondary position in a process which will directly affect our university more than anything else, something is wrong.

What kind of message, real or implied, are the regents sending us? Is the selection of a new president too difficult for us to comprehend?

We must stop the Board of Regents.

Apparently the board doesn't think the university is qualified to be a part of such an important process. Remember, we're not elected officials.

But how qualified are the regents to make such a decision? Only Regent Kermit Hansen has experienced the search of an NU president before. What makes the rest of the board instant experts on such an important matter?

The regents wouldn't even have to worry about involvement from the university. They'll take care of everything for us. They'll tell us not to be concerned.

We must stop the Board of Regents.

If we let the regents make decisions like this without our feelings being known, what's next? Increased tuition? Enforced discrimination? Political brainwashing? Easier opponents for the Huskers?

Regents, wake up. Who are you serving, the university or yourselves? This is not a hobby for us - this is our future. We'd appreciate it if you didn't ruin it.

Effle frustrated by regents' actions

Considering the actions of the Board of Regents at the Sept. 8 meeting, I feel it is necessary to inform the student body of those actions and my concerns.

In a memo dated Aug. 4, Regent Don Blank, chairman of the Internal Governance Subcommittee, suggested a proposal for the composition of the presidential advisory search committee. This proposal suggested that two students serve as members of this committee. I was immediately concerned about one campus' student constituency not being represented on the committee and phoned Regent Kermit Hansen and Regent Chairwoman Nancy Hoch to express my opinions regarding student representation as well as other issues on the search advisory committee.

A second memo from Regent Blank, dated Aug. 15, stated that all three student regents had expressed their concerns about a campus' student constituency being left out of the process. The memo repeated the proposal for two students to serve on the committee. A third memo from Regent Blank, dated Sept. 1, made no mention of any discussion to change the committee's composition.

The board's Internal Governance Subcommittee met the day before the board meeting for nearly three hours. Again, no mention was made of any alteration in the proposal. In fact, the agenda item to discuss the composition of the committee was removed from the agenda with no explanation.

The morning of the meeting, the proposal to discussed was distributed to the regents. This proposal suggested only one student representative.

At no time was this proposal charge discussed with any of the student regents, even though all three had demonstrated their desire to be involved in the discussions.

During discussion on the proposal, a motion was made to reduce the number of general public representatives from six to four, providing an opportunity for additional student representation if desired. The amendment was rejected overwhelmingly.

An additional amendment was proposed to add three ex-officio students, one from each campus, to advise and direct the voting student representative. This amendment was also rejected. The explanation given was that the student regents should provide that direction. This answer perplexes me and seems to contradict the very purpose of creating a search advisory committee outside of the board.

The inadequate student representation on the committee is my primary concern, but there are others. I also feel the committee is weighted heavily toward general public representation. Additionally, there are no guidelines to suggest limits as to how many of these six representatives may be alumni of a particular campus. Faculty representation is inadequate; there is no administrative representation other than ex-officio.

The actions of the Board of Regents on Sept. 8 clearly demonstrates to me that the board is not interested in student opinion. This attitude frustrates me in that the value of our degrees is directly tied to the perception of the University of Nebraska. The president of the system is most visible in creating that perception - adequate student representation is vital in order to protect our interests.

Paula Effle

UNO Student President/Regent

Student questions accountability

The Sept. 8 announcement of a search committee to find a new president for the University of Nebraska system concerns me. As you know, the present plan calls for only one student member on the search committee.

The hiring and termination of Former NU President Ronald Roskens were both decisions made behind closed doors. His termination agreement may cost state taxpayers more than $250,000 to fulfill his contract to 1991. These actions call into question the board's accountability to the people of Nebraska.

Historically, the board has given no rhyme nor reason for its actions. To ensure accountability in the future, the search committee membership should be broad-based. One student is incapable of adequately representing all three campuses.

The needs of UNO are much different than the other campuses. To ensure that the new president is knowledgeable and sensitive to the needs of a non-traditional university is essential. That is why I urge the board to reconsider its decision to place only one student member on the presidential search committee.

If the proposed 12-person committee only has room for one student, I suggest expanding the voting membership committee to 14, to accommodate three student representatives. Bylaws are not set in stone and should not be used as an excuse for excluding representation.

The day has long since passed when a responsible elected official in Nebraska could portray UNO as a second-class university. UNO is the second largest university in this state, with first-class needs, and deserves to be treated as such. Having a UNO student on the search committee is one step to insure that the top candidates for president understand the needs and wants of this university.

UNO Student

SEEKING

What is a 'traditional' student?

Warning: This column may include thinly disguised fatherly advice.

After writing of the trials of the older student, the "non-traditional" student, I thought it only fair to give equal ink to the traditional student.

But, what is a "traditional" student?

By simple Aristotelian logic, we deduce that if you are not "non-traditional" you must be "traditional." (All A is A. All B is not A, and never the twain shall meet — or something like that.)

Translation: if you went directly from high school into college, consider yourself a traditional student — regardless of your race, religion or shoe size.

That word tradition keeps popping up. And the word conjures up a different image for each one of us.

Your expectations and experiences of college tradition probably wouldn't relate to many of my traditional-student experiences (a few years back).

Bear with me while I remember. Think of it as a history lesson.

In the fall of 1962, I first set foot on the campus of Auburn University — a world unto itself, a bastion of the Old South in a small east Alabama town.

At the east end of the campus stands Samford Hall with its historic clock tower and its park lined with ancient oaks draped with Spanish moss. Within the park stands a huge lathe once used to make Confederate cannons (According to legend, the lathe turns whenever a virgin walks by).

Other traditions abound. Our athletic teams are "Tigers," but our mascot is a golden eagle. The screech of a professor's pet eagle during a 19th century football game inspired the most prevalent cheer — "War Eagle!"

— Bill —
WILSON
COLUMNIST

So how did one freshman cope with all this tradition? For starters, he joined a fraternity and wore an orange beanie. He marched in the "Wreck Tech" parade. He yelled himself hoarse at pep rallies and football games. He listened to the Beatles and Peter, Paul and Mary. He painted Sigma Alpha Epsilon's concrete lion. He went to parties. He chased women.

Chasing women presented something of a challenge, because all Auburn coeds lived in a quadrangle of dorms resembling a medieval fortress. The dean of women, who had no sense of humor, strictly enforced the curfews — early or earlier, depending on your date's class standing.

With all this tradition to uphold, how did one find time to study?

Perhaps a clue lies in yet another Auburn nickname: the Plainsmen — borrowed from Oliver Goldsmith's 18th century poem, "The Deserted Village."

"Sweet Auburn, loveliest village of the plains, Where life and health cheered the laboring swain..."

All too often, we neglected our studious labors and too soon deserted the loveliest village.

Such a painful recollection seems like my cue to return to 1989 and to UNO.

UNO, of course, has its own worthy traditions. We have an attractive campus with plenty of green grass and flowers and trees — a good place to ponder eternal truth and such.

But the sound of the traffic on Dodge Street reminds us that the "real" world waits nearby — that college must not be a "time out" from real life.

I wouldn't trade anything for my time at Auburn, and I was fortunate enough to return and graduate. Yet something tells me UNO provides a better setting for ordering one's priorities. (More than 20 years of hindsight helps too.)

Don't deprive yourself of the fun part of college life and tradition, but hear the traffic. And leave time for the books.

'Showboat' actor describes experiences

By ELIZABETH TAPE

When someone invented the word "charisma", he or she must surely have been thinking of John Newton, star of the upcoming Opera Omaha production of "Showboat" opening this Thursday at the Orpheum Theater.

Directed by Mike Phillips, "Showboat" will be conducted by Emmy and Grammy Award winner John Demain.

In a recent interview, Newton spoke about his experiences in the theater and interest in the Kern-Hammerstein work based on Edna Ferber's novel.

John Newton

Examining the issue of black-white relationships, "Showboat" was for a long time deemed excessively controversial and censored to eliminate eliminate any allegedly contentious material. "In the last 30 years," Newton said, "it has not been performed intact."

Things changed in 1982. "In a New Jersey warehouse, they found the remaining portion and original scores that had been lost and a lot of material that had been cut. Musicologists restored it and this production is very much as it was performed originally," Newton said.

From that time forward, "Showboat" has enjoyed a well-received renewal around the country, including its extended run by the Houston Grand Opera Company.

Newton spoke about the appeal of "Showboat". "It was a seminal show for American musical theater. Before then there had been light operettas, which were wonderful, but they were a few pretty tunes and a few jokes and maybe a little indication of a plot, but all of a sudden here comes a musical with a score you just can't believe, you turn the pages here are songs you've know all your life ... and it has a wonderful plot, a serious plot and a subplot that has a lot to do with the treatment of blacks."

Theater— PREVIEW

Recounting events centering on a travelling showboat in the latter 1900s, "Showboat" evokes glimpses into an essential element in American theatrical history.

"I have buried in the back of my mind images of a showboat. I always wanted to be in the theater, and this was such a romantic kind, it represented a great tradition of travelling theater," Newton said.

After a childhood in the small Western Colorado town of Grand Junction and a three-year service in the armed forces during World War II, Newton attended college. His entry to the world of the theater was quite inadvertent, when, in a freshman English course, he was randomly assigned to a drama teacher.

Despite such an unorthodox start, Newton said, "I walked in the first day and I fit right in. For as long as I can remember, the place I feel most at home is in the theater."

After working in Hollywood from 1958 to 1968, Newton has worked extensively with regional theater, having just completed performing in "Harvey" in a Long Island Theater.

Preparations for his current role as Captain Andy in "Showboat" are intensive. "The first thing I do is to study the script very closely," Newton said. "Find out who the man is what his background is. It is an enormous help if there is some connection with the character. Like Andy, I had run a melodrama company in my life and it gives me something in common with him."

The final days before opening night can become frenzied. "We have dress rehearsal right before opening. Rehearsals for a musical are complicated because you're doing books scenes in one place and rehearsing dance in another and songs in another and the problem is getting them all together so the last few days are chaos. Then there comes the time when you have to do it," Newton said.

Newton's ardor for acting has the opportunity to reach a third generation, as his grandchildren now come to see him perform. "I did 'Mass Appeal', a two-man show, with their father and we took them aside and showed them how grandfather was going to hit father in the stomach and it wasn't going to hurt him. They think everybody acts, what do they know? They think it's a perfectly normal thing to do."

Normal, yes. But ordinary, definitely not.

Career fair will be held Sept. 13 in Student Center

BY ROBERT BAILEY

If you need a job or you are looking for a new one, then you may want to attend UNO's annual Career Fair.

The Career Fair will be held tomorrow from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the Student Center Ballroom and will feature representatives from 43 companies.

UNO's Career Placement Services, which sponsors the fair, has invited a variety of companies to participate, according to Lois Deily, acting director of Career Placement Services.

Companies represented at the fair will range from nationally known corporations, such as ConAgra, General Electric and K mart to local businesses, such as Richman Gordman, Home Real Estate and Mutual of Omaha. Even the Peace Corps will be represented.

An Interview Skills Workshop will also be conducted Wednesday from noon to 1 p.m. in the Student Center State Room. Guest lecturers from Coopers & Lybrand and Mass Mutual will be giving advice about job interviews and resumes from the employer's perspective. They will also answer questions about looking for a job.

Deily said the fair is in an informal setting that provides for an exchange of career information.

"The nice part of it is that you can just come as you are and you don't have to run all over town to get this information," Deily said.

Deily said fair attendance has been growing over the years.

"This is the third annual fair and we already fill the Ballroom with businesses, so we have had to turn down some requests for tables," she said.

Career Placement may sponsor another fair in the spring, Deily said.

"It would concentrate on the public sector, such as government agencies and non-profit corporations," she said. "We have a date in mind, but are still working on the details."

All UNO students and alumni are invited to attend the fair. Seniors and alumni can also register for career placement services.

Drug testing facing uncertain future in NCAA, UNO

By DAVID JAHN

In January, the National Collegiate Athletic Association governing board will vote on extending and strengthening its drug-testing policy.

Since November 1986, the NCAA has tested qualifiers in national championships and post-season football bowl games. According to Frank Uryasz, NCAA director of health sciences, this policy may change.

"This January, we will be voting on legislation that would allow year round testing by the NCAA," said Uryasz.

Uryasz also said the board will vote on stricter penalties for players found guilty of drug involvement.

"What we are seeing is a trend of strengthening sanctions," Uryasz said. "We are also voting on making the penalties harsher for those who have knowledge of use or contribute to the use of the banned drugs."

Currently, a player who has tested positive is declared ineligible for post-season competition. The athlete remains ineligible for 90 days after the testing date.

Before eligibility is restored, the athlete must re-take and pass the drug test.

—Bob Gibson

Uryasz said the NCAA encourages but does not require institutions to have drug testing programs. He said about 60 percent of Division I schools have testing policies.

However, for Division II and III, about 30 percent of the schools have implemented testing programs. Uryasz said these smaller schools simply do not have the funding for such testing.

UNO may be one of those schools.

Athletic Director Bob Gibson said he isn't sure whether UNO or the North Central Conference even has a testing policy.

"I don't know if a specific drug testing policy has been written down or not," Gibson said. Gibson said he hasn't had time to study the NCC policies since taking over as athletic director in May.

On Aug. 22 in Boulder, Colo., a court declared mandatory drug testing of athletes at the University of Colorado unconstitutional. The court stated testing athletes is unreasonable search and seizure.

Gibson said a few years ago UNO discussed the possibility of testing their athletes but was advised not to in fear of violating privacy laws.

"Two years ago we looked into testing our athletes but our legal council advised us that it would not be a safe idea," Gibson said.

However, even if UNO does not have a drug testing policy, under NCAA bylaws each athlete must sign a drug-testing consent form. According to Uryasz, if an athlete does not sign the consent form, eligibility is not granted for the season.

Lady Mavs muscle up for success on court

By JIM ANDERSON

Bigger, stronger and faster describes UNO's volleyball team.

For six years, the Lady Mavs have used weight lifting as part of their conditioning program. This year's program is unique, assistant coach Rose Shires said, because the women have a separate weight room from the men.

"We needed a chance to lift without waiting," Shires said. "It eliminates the need to get up at six in the morning to lift. That was hard on the team the morning after a match."

Approximately $75,000 raised last spring to construct the women's weight room in April.

Shires, who supervises the Lady Mavs weight training, said the program helps the players improve their jumping, quickness and overall body control.

"They have really been receptive to the whole idea," Shires said. "Especially when they see the improvements in their game."

Shires said two Lady Mavs who have benefitted from the training are juniors Brenda Baumann and Amy Gradoville.

Baumann, a middle-hitter from York, Neb., made the All-American Strength Team last year. Baumann said she was surprised to make the team, "but it really felt good to know the hard work paid off."

Baumann was nominated by UNO trainer Denise Fandel because of her strength development as a volleyball player last season.

When nominated, Baumann bench pressed 145 pounds and lifted 425 pounds on the hip sled.

Shires said Gradoville, an outside-hitter from Omaha Marian High School, also improved her game due to dedication to weightlifting.

"You can see the difference in her vertical jump and the power she has when she attacks the ball," Shires said.

Shires said weight lifting will make up for the height disadvantage the Mavs face.

"We're a lot smaller so we have to be stronger," she said. Weight training also decreases injuries, Shires said.

"We have not had as many ligament tears or shoulder problems as before," she said.

The year-round program consists of three cycles: off-season, pre-season and in-season. Most of the lifting is done in the off-season and pre-season to build a good strength base, Shires said.

The program includes two divisions. The first stresses power and strength in the major upper-body and leg muscles. This includes work with the hip-sled, bench press and lateral pull-downs.

The second division concentrates on quick lateral movements. One of these exercises, called lunges, is used to develop the quick diving reflexes a volleyball player needs, Shires said.

Shires added that weight lifting provides not only strength, but endurance.

"The weights will help us to be as competitive in the fifth game as in the first."

First loss for UNO

Lopers lump loss on Mavericks

By TONY FLOTT

Although it is still undecided whether Kearney State College belongs in the University of Nebraska System, the Lopers' football team seems ready.

Saturday night, the Antelopes of Kearney State outran the Mavericks 17-14 at Kearney, Neb.

The win improved the Lopers record to 1-1 for the season and 5-11 against the UNO Mavericks.

UNO, falling to 1-1, never led the game and trailed by as many as 10 points early in the fourth quarter.

"I don't think we got beat by a better team," UNO Coach Sandy Buda said. "They just wanted it more than we did."

The Mavs drove to the Kearney State 28-yard line on their opening possession.

However, the offense stalled and kicker John Bonacci's 45-yard field goal attempt sailed wide-left.

The Lopers took the ball and drove 72 yards, scoring on a 7-yard pass from quarterback Russ Harvey to receiver Donnie Lee, putting Kearney State up 7-0.

UNO didn't answer until early in the second quarter when quarterback Paul Cech tossed an 18-yard touchdown pass to receiver Victor Barnes.

The play ended a 74-yard drive and tied the score 7-7.

On Kearney State's next possession, the Maverick defense conceded to a Loper long gainer when Harvey threw a 41-yard pass to the UNO 25-yard line.

The Lopers drove to the Maverick 8-yard line but were forced back to the 25-yard line on three consecutive losses.

On fourth down, kicker Darren Grauerholz booted a 41-yard field goal, putting Kearney State up 10-7.

In the third quarter, Kearney State extended its lead to 17-7 after Harvey tossed his second touchdown pass, this time a 4-yarder to running back Brad Arrowsmith.

"It seems like we were a person away on several plays from stopping them," Buda said.

The Mavericks answered the Lopers late in the third quarter after recovering a Harvey fumble at Kearney's 8-yard line.

UNO was called for holding on their first play after the fumble, moving them back to the 16-yard line.

Cech then connected with Bob Gordon for his fourth touchdown pass of the season. The Mavs trailed by three, 17-14.

Late in the fourth quarter UNO got to the Kearney State 44-yard line before ending their possession on downs.

The Lopers ran out the 3:02 remaining in the game to come away with a 17-14 win.

The Mavericks will return home this Saturday when they host the South Dakota Coyotes in a 7:30 p.m. contest.

"They're a tough, aggressive football team," Buda said. "They've got problems on offense and a defense that's playing well."

Uhler says Lady Mavs feel like champs after Classic

By GREG KOZOL

Although the UNO volleyball team finished third in the Illini Classic this weekend at Champaign, Ill., Coach Karen Uhler said the Lady Mavs feel like champions.

"We felt like we won," Uhler said of the Lady Mav's finish in the four-team tournament. "Given the competition, we held our own."

UNO lost to the University of Illinois, the eventual tournament champion, 16-14, 15-0, 15-6 Friday night. The Lady Mavs rebounded with a 15-13, 12-15, 16-14, 15-11 victory over Memphis State University on Saturday.

UNO kept pace with the fifth-ranked Illini early in the match, but fell 16-14 in the first game.

"We really deserved that first game. It could have gone either way," Uhler said.

Uhler said the Lady Mavs' serving, led by sophomore Jennifer Dickey, made the first game close.

"The serving was solid," Uhler said. "I was very pleased with the performance."

Dickey was a first-team all-tournament selection due to her consistent serving and setting, Uhler said. Dickey racked up 70 sets in two games.

After a close start, the Illini toppled the Mavs 15-0 and 15-6 to take the match.

"We played with our whole heart and soul that first game," Uhler said. "There was kind of a let down. A team like Illinois will take advantage of that."

Uhler said mistakes in the Mavs passing game, not the Illini team, caused the loss.

"We showed we could play with them point for point when we didn't make mistakes."

UNO bounced back from the Illinois game with a win over Memphis State on Saturday, despite falling behind 13-1 in the first game.

"We let them slip a little, but there was no desperation," Uhler said. "The team showed me something the way they came back."

"It was very hot and humid on Saturday. We started out kind of slow, but we finally got the tempo going," Uhler said.

Uhler said strong spiking by Brenda Baumann and Amy Gradoville keyed the win.

Baumann totaled 19 kill-spikes and Gradoville added 15 as the Lady Mavs improved their record to 3-3.

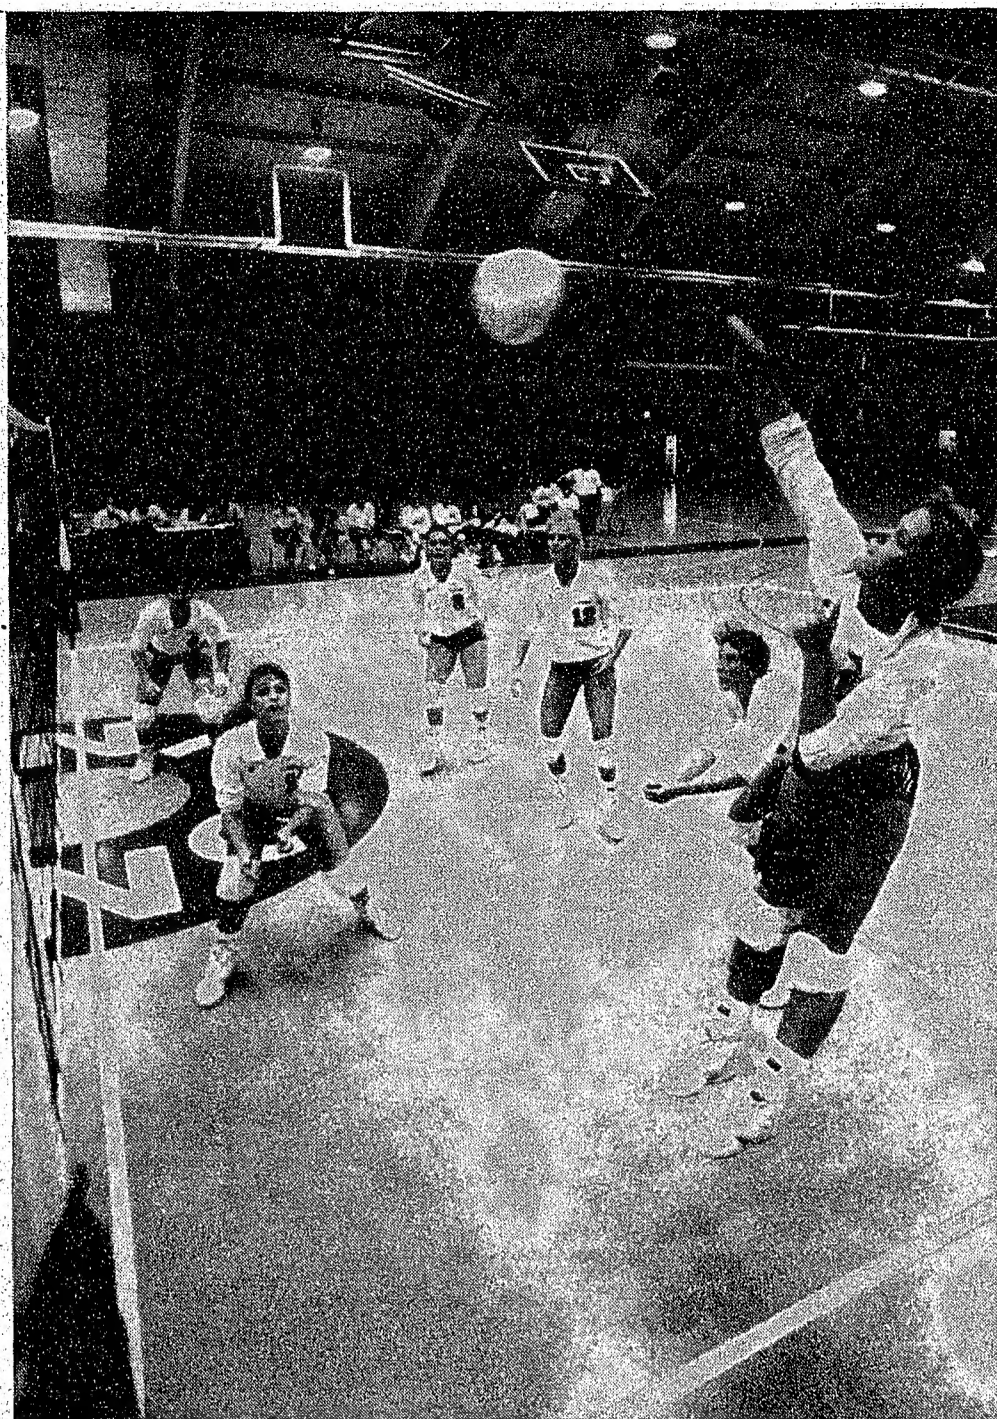

"Amy and Brenda have been outstanding this year," Uhler said.

Heading into the Division II West Texas Classic on Friday, Uhler said she is confident with her team's progress.

Uhler said, "It's only the fifth game, and have shown we can put everything together to win."

"We let them slip a little, but there was no desperation. The team showed me something the way they came back."

BULLS-EYE

Darts make mark up popularity chart

By GREG KOZOL

First in a series on alternative sports.

Football weren't the only things sailing through the air this weekend.

While screaming fans, no-neck fullbacks and smiling cheerleaders packed football stadiums across the country, the dark, smoky 18th Amendment Saloon was packed with another weekend athlete—the dart thrower.

Although darts lack the glamour of football and basketball, most participants agree there are advantages to the sport.

"It's a good recreational game," UNO sophomore Kevin Phelps said. "It's good because you can drink beer at the same time."

Phelps was playing "cricket" with three UNO students, senior Rob Barnes, junior Ted Nelson and sophomores Joe Wypiszewski.

The object of cricket is to hit numbers 15 through 20 and the bulls eye three times. The team that does this before its opponent receives points. The team with the most points wins.

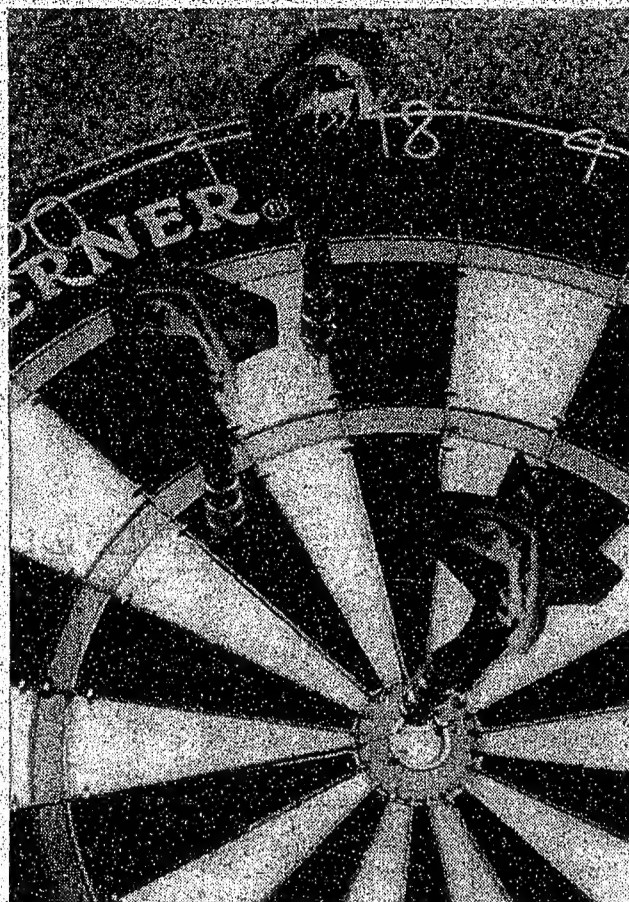

"It's not as easy as it looks," Nelson said. "It's kind of tough on the wrists. You have to keep your wrists straight because if it goes limp you won't hit the board."

Phelps, a UNO wrestler, carefully lines his toes against the white line and tosses his dart at the board. His first shot hits No. 9, which means no score for the Phelps-Barnes team.

His second shot hits No. 16, the first time his team has hit that number.

Wypiszewski, who also wrestles for UNO, hits No. 16 on both of his throws. Because his team already hit 16 three times, they get 16 points every time he hits that number.

Barnes, an assistant baseball coach at UNO, steps up, licks the needle, and throws with all his might. The dart bounces off the board.

"I put too much into it," Barnes says. "But you have to throw hard or it won't stick on the board."

On his second toss, Barnes throws sidearm while sitting down, missing the board completely.

"That's how he was in baseball," Phelps jokes. "He never had any control."

Finally, Nelson pushes the dart from his belt, hitting the bulls eye. Two more bulls eyes and the game is over.

All four players stressed that they play for fun. "We're not in a league," Phelps said. "It's purely recreational, and it builds up our self esteem."

SPORTS

After one-half hour, Wypiszewski and Nelson give high-fives after the final bulls eye and a 158-37 win.

"The game is only a quarter," Phelps says. "Bad players like us can play for one hour. It's cheap entertainment."

But not everyone sees darts as purely recreational.

"I find darts exciting," said UNO junior Kevin Champion, who has played in 10 dart leagues over the last year. "But it is also very competitive."

Champion said league teams of up to four players are sponsored by local bars and play nine to 11 games of either cricket or 301.

In 301, each team starts with 301 points and has the points subtracted with every number they hit on the board. The first team to zero wins.

Champion said besides league play, he enjoys experimenting with different dart games.

These games include horse, tic-tac-toe and cut-throat cricket.

"All the games have a degree of difficulty," Champion said. "But cricket is probably the hardest because you have to know when and where to throw the dart."

"It's a hobby more or less," he said. "But it is really getting big. There isn't a bar in Omaha without darts."

Whether for fun or competition, darts has become big business.

"It helps attract people to the place and keeps them around when they are here," said Darrell Hein, manager of the 18th Amendment.

Hein said darts is helping his business as the sport grows in popularity.

"For about five years, it's been popular with the college kids," he said.

Kim Johnson of the Greater Omaha Dart League, a company that organizes dart leagues, said the sport is catching on.

"We will have 200 to 250 teams for the fall by the time the season starts this week," she said.

"It's gaining popularity all over the United States," Johnson said.

She said any darter can qualify for the Bullshooter, a national tournament in Chicago this May. She said there is also national championships for league players.

For Phelps darts is a demanding sport. "It demands a lot of beer."
